

Jubal Lee Young

Jubal Lee Young's songs are reckless, deep and spiritual, meticulously crafted and delivered by an amazing voice that can go in a heartbeat from a falsetto whisper to a lions roar.

The only son of singer-songwriter Steve Young (Seven Bridges Road, Lonesome Onry and Mean) and Terry Newkirk (My Oklahoma, Come Home, Daddy), Jubal grew up around the best of the 70's and 80's Country, Folk, and Bluegrass artists, who happened to be his parents amazing circle of famous and infamous friends.

Those influences are certainly there, but there is a decided edge that comes from listening to a lot of stuff that rocked, too.

Young has experienced life's darker sides, yet transcends them in his songs. Along the way, he came up with a unique sound that encompasses the diverse styles of the musically fertile Southland, but with a genius for intelligent lyrics and wry humor that is altogether fresh.

Jubal Lee Young has learned from the greats, first-hand, right there at the kitchen table. You can hear it. He's the real deal.
